

isted within the patriarchal type of society. The tendency to restrict abortion rights in fact clearly aims at a restriction of sexual pleasure, which consequently could be identified with an imperative of the male sexual pleasure. And what pleasure is there in this restriction of pleasure? Obviously, that is the pleasure of forbidding pleasure to the other - to the woman. From this conclusion it clearly follows: those who believe in existence of an immoderate and unrestrained sexual pleasure, are the conservatives and not the feminists! The advocates of the pluralist, liberal, and democratic concepts offer a new model of an economy of sexual pleasure based upon a demystifying of the right of the other to seek pleasure. This type of discourse therefore is not in fact concentrated around the “problem” of pleasure, except in the ironic remarks about the arguments of its adversaries.
